

WAGENINGEN UNIVERSITY AND RESEARCH CENTRE, ATLAS BUILDING

Wageningen, The Netherlands

RAFAEL VIÑOLY ARCHITECTS

Wageningen University and Research Centre chose an agriculturally depleted field as the site for the Centrum de Born, its new, consolidated campus north of Wageningen, the Netherlands created in part to express the university's developing commitment to environmental research. Rafael Viñoly Architects responded to this contextual challenge by creating a structure that answered client specifications in innovative ways. The Atlas Building is a flexible structure, perfectly suited to its current purpose and also prepared for change. The building's precast concrete latticework doubles as a structural exoskeleton and renders the interior almost entirely column free.
